Sir:

The applicant herewith submits copies of two additional documents
(with English abstracts) for the examiner's consideration.

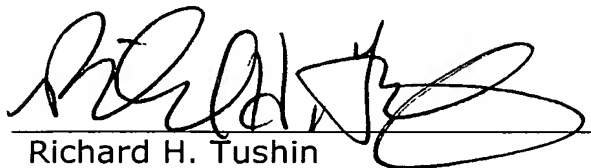

These documents each disclose a system for displaying anaglyphic color images based on a two-color principle. As explained in the current application, the prior art images are encoded in a point-for-point fashion.
Therefore the phrase anaglyph ("drawn twice") is used for such color encodings. The current invention is based on the concept that the encodings are no longer point-to-point, such that three images are created from two (stereo) images and combined in a single image, which, correspondingly, is decoded into three part-images, subsequently

"processed" by the viewer in order to provide two (stereo) images and ultimately the impression of a three-dimensional structure.

Respectfully submitted,

DYKEMA GOSSETT PLLC
